'Secret NATO papers found in street'

LONDON (R) — A bag containing documents marked "top secret—NATO" and giving details of submarine operations was found by a man in a Loudon street on Friday, the Daily Telegraph newspaper reported Monday. The Telegraph quoted garage owner Michael Scott as saying he found the documents in a white canvas bag, secured with a lead seal, which he broke to make sure they were official. "I noticed what appeared to be a graph with names and details of submarines. I saw the word 'nuclear' and there was a table giving details of where the submarines were operating, their firepower, speeds, depths and other information," he said. Mr. Scott, who recalled references to tanks and NATO strategy but not names of the submarines, put the documents back and handed the bag to a passing policeman,

'The Syrian connection'

An Israeli defence official told a briefing for American reporters that Syria might be linked to a rocket attack in Beirut Sunday in which two Soviet katyushas exploded near the U.S. ambassador's residence where Mr. Shultz was staying the night.

The official said the rockets were intended either to hit the residence or to narrowly miss it, serving to remind U.S. negotiators of the Syrian and Palestinian role in the withdrawal talks.

The rockets were fired during fighting between Christian and Druze militias.

Thompson displays bewildering array of subjects, styles

By Meg Abu Hamdan and Ziad Abu Iqban Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN - At first glance the work of John Thompson, now on show at the British Council in an exhibition entitled "Light Life" seems to consist of a bewildering array of subject matter and styles. Apparently disconnected, linked only by the fact that they are all found in Jordan, are studies of birds crafted with textbook precision, looser, freer sketches of Irbid's monochromatic grid and portraits that range from the humorous to the horrific. On closer study, however, the 31 paintings take on a surprising unity. Not only have they all been produced with painstaking care, with a technical virtuosity that only comes when an artist really knows his medium (in this case a mixture of gouash and watercolour), but more importantly they are not so much paintings of many unrelated subjects but studies of the light, texture and patterns these subjects happen to create.

Take for example "Sunlight". Here the sun, pouring in through an unseen window and transparent curtain, casts the shadows of the latter's bold floral pattern, like a giant silkscreen, across the wall and door which in turn create their own shadows and depths. The intensity of the slanting light bleaches out the details so that, with a little help from blurred eyes, the painting becomes abstract -- a rich pattern of soft. muted and translucent colours.

Thompson has used the same principle to portray the repeating grids of the small square windows set in the small square houses, so much a feature of Jordan's towns and villages. Sometimes he captures the lively twinkle of these windows as they dot the darkness of the night blue sky, at othertimes he reflects their vacant torpidity as they stare out at the approaching and inevitable storm of dust. Thevegetable market, the old bedouin's hattar, the darting fish in Aqaba's coral, the irises and the swallowtails have all provided Thompson with patterns, reflections, shadows and light which are ultimately his real source of inspiration. Thompson came to Jordan in the autumn of 1981 to start the fine arts department at Yarmouk University, literally from scratch. Prior to that, he studied for three years in Manchester on a B.A. course and two years at the Central School of Art and Design in London studying for an M.A. There his area of specialisation was graphic illustration with a strong bias towards freehand drawing and painting, as opposed to technical illustration. Whilst studying for the M.A. and for two years after, he was involved in the world of commercial art, illustrating anything from children's books to film posters. Although, he says, this was not financially rewarding, it was an edu-cation that no college could offer.

It was only after a year, he says, that he started to feel settled and able to absorb the Jordanian environment; its colours, shapes, patterns, tones, light and moods. "Jordan has to grow on you and the longer I stay the more artists' work; and more so to day motivated I feel to paint", he says where such a large variety of art honestiv.

"Most of the contemporary Jordanian art I have seen does not relate to its traditional art, but then there is no reason why it should in such changing times, especially since many Jordanian artists go abroad to study." He says

> Thomson's previous experience has enabled him to paint the scenes of Jordan with a consummate and breathtaking skill, an abilitythat however at times renders his work a little cold. ### Search for the right balance

THE meeting chaired by Prime Minister Mudar Badran on Wednesday to discuss industry in Jordan and its problems highlights the need to examine and review on regular basis our development process. Apart from the extraneous circumstances this process is hampered not so much by lack of resources as by wasting some available resources; not so much by the slow pace of industrialising as by paying little more than lip service to supporting the agriculture sector; and, perhaps most importantly, not so much by identifying our changing developmental needs as by our inaction to do anything about

We can most probably survive for long without resources as we have been doing for a number of years now, but we cannot for long ignore the fact that waste in existing resources has to be fought at all levels, all the time, in order to make our survival more healthy and meaningful.

We have to keep up the search for the right balance between industrialisation and agriculture. The road to supporting and constantly improving both sectors, without damaging social structures, the environment and others, is open-ended.

The single most important accomplishment for Jordan, however, remains a socio-political one: that of taking action to meet our changing needs once they are identified. Here, the task is particularly difficult. When the identification of a certain problem preceded detecting its effect on the country, it has not always been easy for us to prepare the ground to cope with the changing situation. If progress is sought, taking an approach that will take this into account is the only alternative to chaos at the last moment.

To go into details of how the socio-political climate can be readied for change is both long and complicated. But there is a problem here that has to be tackled, and Jordan needs to start talking at length about it as soon as possible.

ARABIC PRESS EDITORIALS

Al Ra'i: Arabs must face responsibilities

IN an interview given by His Majesty King Hussein to Al Nahar Lebanese daily, the King clearly and courageously outlined Jordan's principled stand in relation to the central Arab cause, namely the Palestinian question. The King emphasised that Jordan will not usurp the Palestine Liberation Organisation's (PLO) position as the sole representative of the Palestinian people, and that Jordan will not partake in any negotiations for peace in the Middle East without a concrete accord with the PLO, endorsed by the Arab Nation,

The King clarified Jordan's attitude not only towards the Jordanian and Palestinian people but also to the United States, and the world in general. The King also named several points which should be taken into account by the common Arab effort. He stressed that by remaining in their present position, the Arabs will not be able to foil Israel's plans, and the annexationist schemes of Jordan's Zionist neighbour will be implemented without impediment. Moreover, the King warned against the danger of a possible internationalisation of the Middle East conflict, which would further complicate the issue. On the forthcoming Arab summit, the King warned that the convening of such a summit without sufficient preparation and a consensus on certain major issues would be counter productive.

In the light of the facts the King presented in his interview, it is obvious that only a pan-Arab, active stand can face up to the challenges of the present situation. The responsibility of all Arabs must now be to make the best of all opportunities for peace available. The U.S. should not be given the chance to claim in future that she was ready to work out a solution to the Palestinian question, but that it was the Palestinians who scuppered all such hopes by their actions.

Al Dustour: King reaffirms line

HIS Majesty King Hussein reiterated in his interview with Al Nahar. the Lebanese daily journal, Jordan's position vis-a-vis the Middle East process and the Jordanian-Palestinian relationship. He clearly and definitely ruled out any unilateral participation in any peace talks on the Palestinian question. The only possible way to move forward so as to serve the Arab cause is through a joint effort to be agreed upon by Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO). which will then receive overall Arab support.

The King referred to the dangers of the continued construction of Israeli settlements, which have reached new peaks since President Reagan announced his initiative for the Middle East. When asked about President Reagan's initiative, the King pointed out that it had indeed included negative aspects as well as positive ones, but that it was the most courageous among all the peace proposals ever presented by the U.S. administrations. The Jordanian-Palestinian talks did in fact reach an advanced state of coordination, but the Pulestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) stopped short of actually signing an agreement that would become a basis for a joint effort to foil Israeli plans, and hence save the occupied territories and their people, the

Sawt Al Shaab: Fresh efforts essential

JORDAN supports the Palestinians' rights and will never act as a substitute for the Palestinians, was the main plank of the interview given by His Majesty King Hussein to the Lebanese daily Al Nahar. The King also clarified that Jordan is committed not to participate in any peace negotiations unless their is a Palestinian input and a pan-Arab endorsement.

On peace prospects for the region, the said that the Arab peace plan adopted by the last Arab summer and the Arabs around a specific target. It outlined the basic elements of a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East. The Jordanian-Palestinian talks aimed at finding a political framework within which to continue the relationship between the two peoples. They also considered the creation of an agreed mechanism for the combination of their joint potentials to face the Israeli annexationist plans. When an agreement on the issue was about to be reached, new obstacles impeded the path of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in its political drive to reach a joint effort with Jordan.

an Times | Syria plays important role in withdrawal talks

By Hugh Carnegy Reuter

DAMASCUS - As American' Secretary of State George Shultz strives to secure the withdrawal of Israeli invasion forces from Lebanon. Syria bides its time. knowing well that it plays a decisive role in the matter.

Some 40,000 Soviet-equipped Syrian troops are stationed in Lebanon, with about 6,000 Palestinian fighters in areas under their control. They have been there since Syria sent in its army to help end the Lebanese Civil War

Most of them are stationed in the Bekaa Valley where they confront Israel's 30,000-strong accupying army which stormed across the horder last June to oust Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) guerrillas from Lebanon.

All parties involved in Lebanon's U.S.-backed efforts to rid its territory of foreign forces accept that the first step is an agr-

Israel for an Israeli withdrawal.

The terms of any pact would be put to Damascus which would wield a virtual veto as Israel has made clear it will not withdraw without a corresponding Syrian pull-out. Syria maintains the same position with regard to Israel.

Syria's crucial role led to speculation that Shultz, now engaged in what is expected to be a lengthy shuttle between Beirut and Jerusalem in pursuit of a pull-out agreement, would also travel to Damascus to see President Hafez

But American officials in the Syrian capital said be was unlikely to do so unless he had an Israeli-Lebanese deal, still not fortheoming after four months of U.S.-sponsored talks, to put to Assad's hardline government.

Damascus has said through its official media that it is prepared to withdraw its forces from Lebanon, but only on condition that there is leads an Israel-backed militia in eement between Lebanon and a total Israeli withdrawal.

Western and non-aligned diplomats in Damscus agree that this undertaking is genuine, but they add that it hinges on a complete Israeli pull-out.

"Syria is quite rigid on this." said one. "They say total withdrawal and they mean it."

This appears to be the crux of the American difficulty in securing an all-party withdrawal as

NEWS ANALYSIS Israel is holding out for conditions tied to its pull-out which are not only unacceptable to Damascus.

but to Lebanon as well. Israel wants to leave military liaison officers attached to the Lebanese army in the south and to have joint Israeli-Lebanese patrols which it says are needed to ensure border security.

It also wants renegade Lebanese Major Saad Haddad, who southern Lebanon, to be officially made local commander of the Lebanese army.

These have been publicly rejected by Lebanese ministers, and diplomats in Damascus say they would certainly be unacceptable to Syria. "In some ways the Lebanese position represents that of the Syrians as Beirut knows what Damscus will not stand for."

commented one. An added complication, diplomats say, is that although Syria is genuine in saying it will pull back its forces should a complete Israeli withdrawal be effected, that does not mean it actually wants to withdraw.

To remain if its conditions were met would mean risking unacceptable damage to Syria's intemational relations, especially its valuable economic and political ties with moderate Arab states such as Saudi Arabia, the diplomats say.

The diplomats judge that Syria would be content to leave its troops in Lebanon and that Damascus reckons this is the likeliest outcome as it does not believe that Israel will withdraw.

They say failure to agree on withdrawal would suit Damascus because it could retain its weighty influence over Lebanon and continue to confront Israeli forces with its growing arsenal of modern Soviet weapoury.

Syria would thus regain the military prestige which was badly battered during the invasion last year when it lost 85 jets and key antiaircraft positions.

At the same time a continued Syrian presence would scupper U.S. Middle East peace efforts which Damscus regards as pro-Israeli, anti-Palestinian and contrary to both its interests and those of its Moscow allies, the diplomats

Despite these difficulties, American officials including Shultz insist that agreement can be reached and that progress can then be made on President Reagan's flagging Middle East peace plan announced last September.

The plan envisages Palestinian self-rule in the Israeli occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan, but so far it has been rejected by Israel and Syria, while the PLO has refused to accept it as a basis for peace.

Shultz's shuttle mission began against a background of growing tension between Israeli and Syrian forces in the Bekaa with at least two reported incidents of Syrian troops opening fire on Israelis who they said were advancing into unoccupied territory to build new fortifications.

But diplomats in Damscus say talk of renewed large scale fighting between the two sides is exaggerated.

They say there are likely to be isolated clashes but they doubt that either side had any interest in ali-out attack.

British priest's involvement in anti-nuclear movement stirs controversy

By Stephen Powell

LONDON - The rapid growth of the anti-nuclear movement in Britain has thrust an unassuming Roman Catholic priest into the centre of fierce political con-

Monsignor Bruce Kent, 53, who believes it is his duty to be "restless in the face of injustice." is the head of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND), the country's largest anti-nuclear group.

A general election is widely predicted this year and nuclear weapons are expected to be a major issue for the first time since Britain exploded an atomic bomb 31 years ago.

The opposition Labour party is pledged to scrap Britain's nuclear senal while the ruling Conservatives say they would strngthen it.

With the nuclear arms issues now firmly established at the centre of British politics. Monsignor Kent's position has become a sensitive matter for the Roman Catholic Church.

This week cardinal Basil Hume. leader of Catholics in England and Wales, expressed misgivings about the Monsignor's role and indicated he might order him out of his CND post.

Debate on nuclear weapons is growing more and more heated. with the Conservatives and CND exchanging insults almost daily.

The controversy over Monsignor Kent broke with the publication of a statement by Cardinal Hume that if the CND became more political "it would be difficult for a priest to hold responsible office in the direction of the movement." Since Monsignor Kent took up his full-time CND job in 1980, the organisation has changed beyond recognition. Then it was a tiny group of

More than 100,000 people joined in CND Easter demonstrations which focused public attention on CND and its leader. Monsignor Kent appeared on television taking part in a blockade of a top-secret nuclear weapons factory at Burghfield. West of London. After the Easter rallies, some outraged Catholics deluged Cardinal Hume with mail. suggesting that the Monsignor would be better employed if he returned to his London parish.

The Cardinal's statement on Monsignor Kent, drafted as a reply to these letters, opened the gates to a flood of public comments on the priest and nuclear weapons, especially from the Right.

One Conservative member of Parliament. Michael Brotherton. said: "For some one with such a senior title as Monsignor to be doing as Bruce Kent does, the

NEW CONCORD. Ohio -Twenty-one years ago last Feb. California are little known natruary, astronaut John Glenn blasted off on a historic space flight that may yet land him in the White House. With his formal entry into the 1984 presidential contest Glenn, now 61 and a Democratic Senator from Ohio, has added a dash of star quality to the race for the Democratic Party's nom-

He enjoys the advantages of a amous face, a heroic background in the space programme and as a combat pilot, and a limited reputation as a hard-working. middle-of-the-road Senator. Yet his declaration, before an enthusiastic partisan crowd at the John Glenn high school in New Concord, also raises a question likely to doe him until the primary election season opens next Feb-

In the parlance of his own fraternity of test pilots and astronauts, it is whether John Glenn has "the right stuff" to galvanise voters and become president of the United States.

He was assured of close scrutiny on that score when Senator Edward Kennedy withdrew from the Democratic race last December and left two contenders preeminent in the field -- former Vice President Walter Mondale as the front-runner and Glenn as his best-known rival.

Mondale, with a two-to-one advantage among Democrats over

Glenn, is a familiar political figure struggle where style, flair and an to the public. Other contenders. such as Senators Gary Hart of Colorado and Alan Cranston of iohally. They have room for manoeuvre and time to build standing.

But Glenn is a mixture, revered as a public idol and yet relatively obscure as a political leader. He will come under extra pressure to live up to the public's expectations. Glenn entered the history books on Feb. 20, 1962, when he became the first American to orbit the earth, an event which provoked emotional celebrations as proof that the United States was finally "catching up with the Russians" in space.

Millions turned out to see the freckle-faced marine colonel with the dazzling smile pass in parades. and people wept with pride when he addressed a joint session of Congress. In the outpouring of publicity. Americans learned that he had been a heavily-decorated combat flier in World War II and Korea, and a crack test pilot of supersonic jets as well.

Stood out

He also stood out from the other original astronauts, who tended to be men of few words, by being gregarious and wholesome. delighting to discuss his religious beliefs, the teaching of Presbyterian Sunday school, his close-knit family and above all his deep patriotism. The image, although perfect for a space hero. may not serve so well in a political

After retiring from the space programme, he twice failed to gain a Senate seat from Ohio before winning election in 1974. He muffed a golden publicity opportunity as keynote speaker at the 1976 Democratic convention, delivering a talk so boring that delegates milled about and left the

Taking that fiasco to heart, he has worked hard to polish his delivery, project his warm personality and give crisper outlines of where he stands on the issues. Political professionals credit him with some impressive performances at recent party gatherings around the country. In his politics, Glenn is far more centrist on economic, social and defence issues than his leading Democratic rivals. Although not nearly so conservative as Republican President Reagan, he is more sceptical of domestic spending programmes than most of the liberal Democrats in the field. His top interests, however, are defence policy and foreign affairs. He sits on the Senate foreign relations committee.

Glenn favours a strong U.S. defence but supports the view that Reagan is going overboard. He opposes funding for MX missile production and for the rapid deployment force, but backed development of the neutron bomb and the sales of advanced warplanes to Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

A former Attorney-General. Lord Rawlinson, said that to have a priest in this position was a grave scandal.

There were press reports that the Conservative government and even Pope John Paul were putting pressure on the Cardinal to order Monsignor Kent out of nuclear Defence Secretary Michael Heseltine swiftly denied this, saying he had never raised the matter with Cardinal Hume. The Cardinal himself dismissed one report that he was acting on instructions from Pope John Paul.

The row over Monsignor Kent quickly became a slanging match between CND and prominent Conservatives on the question of Leftist influence in the CND mov-

The priest accused "vicious Right-wing bodies' of conducting a smear campaign against CND to try to link it with the Kremlin.

The harsh polemics of the nuclear debate are something he is now coming to terms with, but he has not been immersed in the anti-nuclear movement since its beginnings.

He has recalled how as an apo-litical young priest he used to watch the ban-the bomb marchers from the steps of his London church and shake his head at the futility of their actions. He did a stint in the army, in the days when Britain still had conscription. From 1947 to 1949 he served as a second lieutenant in the Sixth Royal tank regiment. He went on to train in law at Oxford University and was ordained a priest in 1958. He joined CND in the mid-1960s, several

The Aga Khan said that he had discovered a new sense of pragmatism and a new realism and openness in the discussion of economic problems in countries of Asia and Africa. There was, he said, a recognition of the capabilities of the private sector. which, in the past had often been considered politically unacceptable and that his recognition was extending into the sphere of social institutions. "More and more countries are questioning why it was ever necessary to nationalise competent private school and medical facilities," he said.

Arab-Americans challenge Jews in battle for U.S. public opinion

Israel's invasion of Lebanon, seen close-up on American television, began to erode public support for Israel (photo: UNRWA)

By Warren Richey

An ocean away from war-torn Lebanon, a battle sparked in part by the Israeli invasion last summer continues unabated throughout the United States.

It's a battle for public opinion in the United States, and it's being waged by about 30 increasingly sophisticated Arab-American organisations. Their opponents, a well-entrenched group of about 300 Jewish-American organisations.

Though they rarely meet head to-head in public forums. Arab-American and Jewish-American groups are competing indirectly on college campuses, on radio and television programmes, in newspapers, in advertisements, and through various public-relations campaigns. They are trying to convince a largely uninterested American public of the righteousness of their cause, or -- on occasion - the unrighteousness of their opponents' cause.

Last summer, with the war in Lebanon featured nightly on U.S. television news programmes. Jewish-American leaders were deeply concerned that such close-up views of the invasion and the Israeli seige of Beirut might sway American public opinion toward the Arabs. Opinion polls taken at the time indicated a noticeable erosion of support for Isr-Jewish-American leaders weren't the only ones watching the polls. The leaders of Arab-American groups saw an opportunity to present the Arab cause to an American public more seeptical about the Israeli gov-ernment, though still decidedly pro-Israel.

And for the first time, the largest component of the more than two million-strong Arab-American community -- Americans of Lebanese descent -- was

Right direction

"It is better than it's ever been. and it's going in the right direction," says David Sadd, executive director of the National Association of Arab-Americans (NAAA), a Washington-based lobbying group. "There is a growing inclination for policy makers to listen: there is a growing ability to get our message to the media: there is a growing ability to support politicians financially."

Richard Cohen, spokesman for the conference of Presidents of major American Jewish Organisations, says, "I think the Arab-American community is showing increasing cohesion and strength and is getting its act together in a really effective way. It is more politically active than ever."

Just how strong the Arab-American groups have become and just how much -- if any -support for Israel has been eroded is unclear. In addition, a January Gallup attons with Israel. poll indicates that American support for Israel has rebounded to pre-invasion levels.

According to a booklet printed in January by the Jewish Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, "a sophisticated, wellcoordinated campaign was launched (by American-Arab gro-

Overreaction

Some Arab-American leaders contend the Anti-Defamation League's book is an overreaction to a perceived threat. "They have had the field to themselves for so iong that they are afraid of smaller groups with a different view." says Khalil Jahshan, director of the Association of Arab-American University graduates.

Mr. Sadd of the NAAA says the strongest force currently helping to undermine Israel's image in the U.S. is Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and his policies. which have angered U.S. officials.

McEnroe beats Lendl for WCT

DALLAS (R) — An ill-tempered John McEnroe Sunday won the World Championship Tennis (WCT) finals tournament for a record third time, controlling the net to overcome top-seed Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in a thrilling final by 6-2. 4-6. 6-3, 6-7 (5-7), 7-6 (7-0).

Television replays showed that McEnroe's winning shot in fact passed between the net post and the net and should have been called in favour of Lendl.

But British umpire Mark Cox ruled in favour of McEnroe, and the New Yorker hurled his new graphite racket once more, this time high into the air in ecstasy. Questions put to McEnroe at a press conference after the match focused on his behaviour. He remained unrepentant.

Asked if he thought he should have been penalised, he replied: "I don't think there's anything wrong with throwing a racket unless it hits or endangers someone." McEnroe also disagreed that he should have been penalised for using bad language. Asked why he argued over literally dozens of calls, he responded: "It bothers me when officials make mis-

Liverpool loses fourth successive League match

LONDON (R) — English League Champions Liverpool are clearly not enjoying going through the motions of completing a season in which they have made all their rivais look like also rans. They lost their fourth successive League match when they were beaten 1-0 at Nottingham Forest Monday, but still head the first division by 13 points.

Peter Davenport, once rejected by Liverpool's Merseyside neighbours Everton, scored the only goal in the 76th minute when he dispossessed Scottish intemational Graeme Souness and went on to beat goalkeeper Bruce Grobbelaar.

Second-placed Watford fared a little better at Sunderland, England striker Luther Blissett scoring his second goal of the match in the 88th minute to earn them a 2-2 draw.

Football Association (F.A.) Cup finalists Manchester United endured a nightmare afternoon at Arsenal. The London club went some way towards avenging their F.A. Cup semifinal defeat by United by winning 3-0 and their opponents had both midfielder Remi Moses and manager Ron Atkinson sent off in the final few minutes of an ill-tempered game. Moses' dismissal will cost him a place in the Cup final against Brighton on May 21. He was sent off by referee Eric Read for butting Peter Nicholas as old grudges between the two teams surfaced following two late goals by Brian Talbot.

In the uproar that followed, Atkinson was ordered away from the beach by head for protesting at a decision which gives Moses an automatic two-match ban for violent conduct, starting in 14 days'.

Brighton, who will also be without a key player in the Cup final after centre half Steve Foster earned an automatic suspension for being booked on Saturday, saivaged a point in a 1-1 draw at Birmingham.

But while Birmingham were dging ever nearer safety, Brighton look doomed to second division football next season.

Coventry, one of seven clubs involved in the relegation struggle, lost to a Graeme Sharp penalty at Everton and have now gone 13 games without a win.

Second division leaders Queen's Park Rangers, already assured of promotion, dealt neighbours Fulham's hopes of accompanying them into the top flight another telling blow by winning 3-1. Their marksmen were John Gregory, Simon Stainrod and Tony Sealey.

Choose your partner wisely By Maureen Stalla

THE MOST important factor in developing a good doubles team is selecting the people who will play together. It is common knowledge that good singles players are not necessarily good doubles players; so you cannot automatically team up the number one and two players for the number one doubles team. There are several factors to consider in deciding who will play together. First, the partners must be able to get along with each other on and off the court. They must not be the types who will criticise each other, by words, or by disgusted looks. They must like each other. Some teams communicate verbally by calling for shots, letting a partner know when a lob is about to be put up, shouring a partner off a ball that is going out, discussing strategy, and reassuring each other. Other teams who have played together for many years have developed nonverbal communications, consisting of looks, gestures and shotmaking. Doubles is literally and figuratively a team effort. Without cooperative effort and understanding a team has little chance of success, even if both players are talented.

A second consideration in choosing partners is style of play. Doubles partners must have games that complement each other. It is usually a good idea to put a power player with a steady hitter. With this combination, one player can take the aggressive role and the other can make sure that the team keeps the ball in play long enough to have the chance to win the point. If two big hitters are put together they are often an erratic team. When two retrievers are together, they have trouble putting the opponent away. They end up on the baseline waiting for the opponent to make errors. In doubles, the odds at winning with this style of play are less than in

It is imperative that each partner understands his role as part of the doubles team. The steady player must realise that his partner will take more chances, hit more winners, and make more errors. The aggressive player must be disciplined enough to know when to go for big shots and patient enough to let his partner set him up for a winner.

There are a few players who have the ability to be aggressive or to be consistent, depending on the partner's style of play. That player is the one to have on your team!

Iran, Libya support OPEC price accord

BAHRAIN (R) — Iran and Libya, previously considered the weakest links in OPEC's price structure, are buttressing a new accord by refusing to give discounts, the Middle East Economic Survey (M-EES) said Monday.

Nicosia-based MEES said the two members of OPEC (Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries) had been seemingly steadfast in obeying new prices agreed at crisis talks in London in

OPEC agreed at the meeting to cut its reference price to $29 a barrel and limit output to prevent a price war in the glutted market. Iran and Libya had helped plunge OPEC into crisis by discounting to grab more of the market.

MEES said franian production was holding up reasonably well despite its adherence to official prices.

It quoted official Iranian sources as saying April output was about 2.1 million barrels daily compared with an OPEC quota of 2.4

Libya's main customers had dropped previous objections to paying the new prices and production had risen to around the country's quota of 1.1 million barrels daily, MEES said.

Meanwhile, Iran sold $23 billion worth of oil in the year to March 20, according to Oil Minister Mohammad Gharazi.

Dollar starts very firm in Frankfurt

FRANKFURT (R) — The dollar held firm at 2.4670 marks in early trading Monday equalling 12-week highs touched late last week as sentiment for the currency remained bullish

The opening range was half a pfennig above late New York quotes Friday and 90 points above the previous close here. Dealers said Sunday's clashes in Poland between Solidarity demonstrators and police lent extra support to the dollar. Friday's reported $2 billion drop in the U.S. M-1 money supply had failed to dampen the dollar's strength, they added. Sterling started at 3.858 marks, slightly above Friday's late quotes of 3.838 marks, and held steady in quiet trading as the London market was closed for a Labour Day holiday.

Dealers said last week's meeting of finance ministers in Washington has left the market sceptical that the U.S. will intervene more strongly to curb dollar fluctuations.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said on Friday the American stance on intervention is unchanged and the United States will only act in the case of disorderly markets.

The Bundesbank was not detected intervening in the open marketin early deals Monday but some dealers said they expect light dollar sales if the currency were to test 2.47 marks.

farm produce, diplomats said.

The 14-member executive commission held a brain-storming session to discuss the crisis at a country house near Brussels two weeks ago. It will meet again Tuesday and Wednesday to complete detailed proposals for dealing with the emergency, mainly caused by massive subsidies to the community's eight million farmers.

The community faces a potentially embarrassing cash shortage as it is forced to buy surpluses from farmers unable to compete in a

Officials say an extra $2 billion would be needed this year on top of the $14 billion already budgeted for farm spending.

The proposals which the commission hopes to unveil on Thursday were expected to include a claim to a higher share of the Value Added Tax (VAT) levied in the 10 member-states, diplomats said, as well as the energy and farm surplus taxes.

TOKYO (R) - Share prices on the Tokyo stock exchange rose to record high Monday, stockbrokers said.

It was the fifth successive trading day on which a new record had been set and the market average passed the 8,700 level for the first time to close 22.03 points higher at 8,704.39.

Share values on the Tokyo exchange, the world's largest after Wall Street, have been advancing on hopes that a global economic recovery is underway and will soon spread to Japan.

Steel industry shares firmed slightly but most attention was centred on large companies which are popular overseas because stockbrokers expect foreign investors to start buying in Tokyo later this Drilling was intense last year as the region was able to buck a worldwide trend thanks to relatively only East Asian member of low production costs. Elsewhere exploration slowed as the world glut of oil hit companies' profits and cash flows.

But the slide in oil prices this year and uncertainty over their. future have now curtailed oil searches in some Asian countries too, industry analysts said. Last year the industry notched

According to one exploration manager, 99 rigs were active in Indonesia last month compared with 77 a year earlier.

The state oil company Pertamina signed 13 new production-sharing agreements with oil companies last year. Analysts said these committed the companies to expenditure that should sustain 1982's record drilling rate of 275 wells.

"Indonesia has great appeal for exploration companies," one said. Tax incentives are okay there, its production sharing terms are among the world's best and drilling conditions are good."

By contrast, he said, Malaysia, the region's next leading producer, imposes what may be the stiffest conditions of any Asian country. "The fall in the oil price can't have done much for its appeal." he commented.

Analysts focus on China

Analysts said attention would focus this year on China, where 33 foreign oil companies have applied to drill in the first round of a huge search for offshore oil. China is expected to start awarding exploration contracts in the next few months

There had been some uncertainty whether the recent price fall would sap the oil companies' enthusiasm for hunting China's offshore crude because of the high cost and high risk, they added. In contract talks before the price fell China had been reported in the industry to be adopting a hard-nosed posture. If maintained, this too could cool the companies' ardour.

But some analysts said recent remarks by Bank of China President Jin Deqin that expansion of oil production was a major economic priority suggested China would go all out to realise its dreams of offshore wealth.

Elsewhere, Australia is thought unlikely to repeat last year's record when more than 200 wells were sunk. Only 28 rigs were active there at the end of March compared with a monthly average of 35 last year, a situation due partly to uncertainties over the oil price and the failure of all last year's effort to make a major strike.

India to invest $2b

Another country whose exploration efforts this year could be worth watching is India, which aims to drill vigorously. A finance ministry statement

In the process it and other developing nations bidding to expand tion will be ensely from huge reductions in costs which have followed the slump in drilling elsewhere.
